

NEWTREE GRILLED AGAIN IN PRESENCE OF GAUNT

about Frank's manner when he met him at the factory.

Lee stuck to his previous story and declared that he knew nothing about the crime until he came upon the body that night. They asked him how he happened to go into the basement at that time, and he made the same explanation that he gave before the coroner's jury.

Lee said that he did not see Conroy that night and did not know Conroy by sight. In the afternoon it was planned to take Conroy from the police station to the jail to confront Lee and question the two together.

Landford Scouts Bludgeoned Evidence

Chief of Detectives Newport Landford Wednesday morning indicated the story that the defense of Leo M. Frank has in its possession a bloody club, alleged to have been found by two Pinkerton detectives on May 10 in the National pencil factory, and with which it is reported, the defense will contend Myrman was slain by James Conroy, who employed by the factory.

Asserting that he knows nothing about the alleged bloody club, Chief Landford declared that if Pinkerton detectives found such a weapon on May 10, or on any other date, that he failed to report it to him in Palace to officially report such a find would be regarded as a breach of the pact between the city detective and the Pinkertons as the latter officers, who employed by the pencil factory, have been working hand in hand with city detectives with the understanding that any evidence they unearthed would be communicated to detective headquarters.

Has Revealed No Report.

If Pinkerton detectives found a bloody club in the pencil factory, that fact must be reported to the city detective, Chief Landford said.

The police regard as significant the attitude of Harry Skott, who is managing the Pinkerton investigation, and who, subsequently, may be constrained to assert his belief in the guilt of Frank.

Chief Landford characterized the alleged club in the pencil factory as having any bearing on the "Conroy" case, he said, that it will never figure as evidence.

The chief said the only club found in the pencil factory, of which he has knowledge, was a small section of broom handle, about a foot in length, which hung by the side of the desk of Leo M. Frank in the latter's private office.

Dream Handle Was Found.

"The club bore no blood stains, he said, and showed no evidence of having ever been used as a weapon in any way. It was too light to have done any damage had a blow been struck with it, he said.

Chief Landford treated the bloody club story in the manner of a joke.

"You see, the 'Conroy' case marked the chief, pointing to a perfectly clear spot on his forehead when asked as to the reported find by the Pinkertons.

"Well, that's the answer," he continued. "There is just so much of a bloody club lying there on that floor as there was on the floor of the pencil factory, where it is said the Pinkertons found their bloody club. The 'what thing it is about and will have no bearing whatever on the case of Frank, which will never be introduced in evidence."

No Weapon Was Found.

"When it is recalled that the very spot that yielded up this bloody club was searched thoroughly more than a dozen times by someone other than the city detective and no club or other weapon was found, the ridiculousness of the story is apparent. We searched light factory from top to bottom and found no club, but we did find a very inconspicuous conceivable place for weapons of any size or shape, which might throw light on the mystery, and yet no club was found."

"It is absolutely nothing to it," he said.

"In Frank's private office we found a small piece of broomstick, hanging by a cord beside his desk. There was no blood stain on it, and it showed no evidence of having been used as a weapon. In the first place, it was too light to serve as a weapon, and in the second place, it was found at the time any possible weapons should have been found and would have been found."

Date Bill in Doubt.

Reuben Arnold Wednesday said that he did not expect the bill to pass. He said that he was not sure that the city detective would be able to get the bill passed, and that he was not sure that the city detective would be able to get the bill passed.

Frogs Oust Mice as Bogies of Fair Sex

PORT CLINTON, OHIO, July 22.—Thousands of frogs are migrating westward from the marshes of Lake Erie and the Portage River to Sandusky Bay. In the evening when they stir up their voices their numbers seem to have been multiplied to millions, and hundreds hop into homes. Nervous women have become terrified at the clamor, little frogs that of the proverbial mice.

SENATE ACTS TO ENFORCE WEBB LIQUOR LAW

Passes Hixon-Searcy Bill—Fights Rages Over 3-Gallon Burden of Proof Clause.

By a vote of 26 to 2, the Senate Wednesday afternoon passed the Hixon-Searcy prohibition bill providing for the enforcement of the Webb bill in Georgia.

The bill makes it unlawful for any firm or corporation to transport liquor into the State for illegal purposes and places the burden of proof at such locality upon the shipper when quantities in excess of three gallons are shipped.

Three-Gallon Clause Attacked.

It was around the three-gallon provision as recommended in the Temporary Committee substitute that the fight centered Wednesday morning. Senator Hixon, chairman of the committee and author of the original bill, and Senator Searcy, vice chairman of the committee, opposed this provision on the ground that the whole burden of proof should be placed on the carrier.

This was vigorously opposed, however, by Senator McCall, a member of the committee, who declared that such a provision was an unjust burden upon the State.

Increase in Crimes Charged.

Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, also opposed the Hixon-Searcy measure, declaring that the measure was an effort to punish the innocent carrier rather than the illegal "blind tiger" within the State.

As the bill stands the burden of proof of illegal sale is placed on the carrier and the shipper. Three gallons are shipped into the State. Several specimens, including those of Senator Hixon, striking out the three-gallon clause, were introduced before the final passage of the bill.

In the course of the debate several statements were made by Senator McCall, a prohibitionist in strictness, who declared that under the present prohibition law with its "unfavorable results," fatalities in the State had increased 65 per cent.

APPEAL IN W. & A. CASE ORDERED BY SLATON

Governor Upsets Predecessor's Precedent by Carrying Suit to U. S. Supreme Court.

Governor Slaton Wednesday morning instructed Attorney General Thomas S. Peffer and James K. Hines, chief attorneys for the Railroad Commission, to appeal to the United States Supreme Court in the State's suit against the Western and Atlantic Railroad Company, seeking to restrain the company from charging higher rates than those fixed by the Georgia standard tariff and classification.

The appeal for injunction by the State was turned down by the Superior and Supreme Courts.

Governor Slaton's act is directly contrary to that of Governor Brown, who, when the State Supreme Court ruled against the State, instructed the Attorney General not to appeal, holding it would be of no avail.

The Governor acted upon the advice of the Attorney General and Mr. Hines, who, immediately after his inauguration, urged him to order an appeal.

SIGNS CHAPTER AFTER PHAGAN MYSTERY

The Discovery of the Body of the Slain Factory Girl and Start of Hunt for Slayer.

CHAPTER II.
His heart pounding to supernatural fright, North Lee, the night watchman, forced himself to approach the alarm clock on the pile of debris in the pencil factory basement. A step nearer and he could make out what appeared to be a woman's form. He reached and was on the point of precipitate flight.

Soon after daybreak the news spread that a girl had been killed in the pencil factory. The girl was identified as Mary Phagan, a 14-year-old girl who had been working in the factory for some time. Her body was found in a room at the rear of the building, near the entrance to the street.

The girl, he said, appeared to have been killed by a man who had been with her. The man was seen by the girl's father, John Phagan, who was working in the factory at the time. He was seen talking to the girl in the room where her body was found.

Old Identifies Victim.
She had the same face and the little gold bracelet imbedded in the flesh of her arm.

STATE DEMANDS TRIAL OF FRANK ON MONDAY

Solicitor Declares He is Ready and Will Oppose Any Move for Delay.

Even then he insisted that Conley was in his cell.

When the Detectives Explain. He went to Chief Beavers' office to see if permission had been given for Conley's removal. Beavers said he did not know Conley was gone. Station Sergeant Holcomb was appealed to. He said he had not been notified that the prisoner was to be taken away. Turkey Eye, the barrow, was asked to explain the mysterious disappearance of Conley. He said he did not know where he had taken him. Chief, to satisfy himself that Conley was still in custody, made a personal visit to the jail.

When Beavers and Campbell later were in conference with the chief they told him that they had not notified about their intention because neither Chief Beavers nor Chief Lanford was in the station at the time.

"Don't Like It," He Says, "But I Must Get Used to Being in the Air."

Robert Pettit, 4-year-old son of Mrs. Frances Pettit, of Denver, spends from six to eight hours every day in the elevator of Hotel Analey, because he wants to be an aviator.

Robert figures it this way: There isn't much in buying and running an airplane if you are going to get aloft every time you get a few feet up in the air, the thing to do, therefore, is to get used to being out of the ground—and then you're all right.

"I don't like to ride in elevators," he says, "but I've got to. I'm going to be an aviator when I grow up and I've got to get used to being off the ground. It is working just fine. I can go up in the eighth floor now without getting dizzy. I'll make a dandy aviator, I'll bet!"

The youngster has become a fan of the miller figure to attitudes and guests of the hotel. Every morning, as soon as he can slip away from Mrs. Pettit and his nurse, he straps his little chair into the elevator and sits solemnly behind the operator. He manifests great interest in the operation of the lift, and his greatest joy comes when he is allowed to hold the levers and make believe he is operating the car.

Robert says he is going to have an airplane as soon as he is sure he can safely fly. "I've got a bank with four pennies and a dime in it," he said. "I'm going to get a little good airplane. If it isn't enough, Mama will give me as much more as I need."

Parole Is Asked by Board for Hawthorne

Parole for Julian Hawthorne and Dr. William J. Morton, ex-Treasurer of the United States, who have been serving sentences in the Federal Penitentiary for abuse of the mails in a stock scheme, was recommended Thursday in a report submitted by the Federal Parole Board to Attorney General McPherson.

The recommendation in respect to Hawthorne and Morton had been agreed upon by the Parole Board since their meetings at the Federal prison some time ago, but they have withheld their report, as is the custom, until the prisoners named are eligible to parole.

The indorsement of the Attorney General is regarded as a formality and it is expected that the two will receive their freedom by Saturday. A telegram will be sent at the direction of the Attorney General and it will be followed by a letter containing the formal notice of the parole.

"I am delighted that the recommendation is before Mr. McPherson," said Hawthorne, when Deputy Warden Wilbur Hawk informed him of the action of the parole board. "I was aware that the board had considered my case favorably and it places me in the position of being able to make a free man."

SENATE DEFERS SEPARATION OF MEXICO AND NORTH AMERICA

Barrow Advocates Loss in Upper House After Long and Strenuous Fight

The bill creating Barrow County, with Winder as the county seat, was defeated in the Senate Thursday afternoon after a long and strenuous fight. Advocates of the new county declared a strong effort would be made to re-introduce the act.

A large number of people were down from Winder to witness the action of the Senate. The House favorably on the bill, Senator Dubois, of the Thirtieth District, led the fight for the new county. While this bill passed the House with the indorsement of three of the six Representatives from the affected area, it is known that only one of the Senators of the three from the counties concerned in the bill will actively oppose the bill which comes up for passage.

Either the defeat of the passage of the Barrow County bill, it was argued by some, will mean an end of the consideration of counties by the present Legislature. Others, however, think the bill will not be considered, regardless of the verdict of the counties affected are on hand to want their fight, and will not act. Among the new ones are Warner, Candler and Millidge.

The House and Northwood Committee will be considered by the House committee Thursday afternoon.

Austell Thornton Funeral Thursday

The funeral of Austell Thornton, the prominent young Atlanta who died at Asheville, N. THIRD CHAPTER IN PHAGAN MYSTERY

Arrests of Suspects in the Factory Slaying. Sensation as Leo Frank, Manager Was Taken Into Custody.

TWO EARLY FIGURES IN-PHAGAN MYSTERY

CHAPTER III.
 Everything that occurred, trivial or important, during those first two days after the body of little Mary Phagan was discovered in the pencil factory basement took on a dramatic aspect. The people were keyed to see high a climax by the revolting crime that for a time it seemed to require only a spark to fire them to violent deeds.

Let a strange man or woman appear at the police station to confer with Chief of Detectives Langford and word would be passed that a man or woman who had been arrested on the charge of having committed the crime was being taken to the police station for a hearing.

ARTHUR MULLINAX.

It was this first chapter in the Phagan mystery that had the most dramatic interest to the public. It was the story of the first arrests and the first clues that led to the discovery of the man who had been named in the indictment.

Frank and desired to enter the factory. Actions were Unusual. He called Next Leg in the evening, something he never had done before during Leo's employment.

There was no answer when Leo called his house early Sunday morning after finding the body and calling the police.

There was no answer when Call O'Roar Anderson attempted to get him on the telephone when the four policemen were in the factory early that morning.

It was in a highly suspicious manner when the officers came to his house Sunday morning to take him to the police station for questioning.

All the time that the storm of accusation and bitterness was rising against the young factory superintendent, his attorney, Luther Z. Rosser, kept silent, except to say that Frank in the end would be found guilty innocently.

From Frank's arrest until the next day, when the inquest was to begin, a dozen detectives were searching the factory freely from top to bottom for evidence.

Practically every employee of the plant was questioned and detectives were sent about the city running down fresh leads that came into the possession of the department.

On the eve of the inquest came the tragic funeral services of the murdered child.

He rounded the grave and saw the body lowered into the earth. As the casket disappeared from sight the grief-stricken mother wept.

The whole gruesome story of the finding of the body was repeated at the inquest, which began next day, but nothing was told which would throw any further light on the identity of the guilty party.

Next he told in his ignorant fashion of every move he had made during the fatal day and of his movements in the factory that night.

His statements had every appearance of truthfulness. Corner Donohoe was not able to trip him or catch him in any misstatements. He declared that he had no knowledge that the body of the little girl was buried before 4 o'clock that morning and saw the muffled form in the dim light of his lantern.

The officers who visited the factory that morning told their stories. Several of them were of the opinion that Leo knew much more than he had told and their testimony reflected this opinion, but the inquest of the next day failed to elicit any admissions.

Interest was centered in the testimony of Frank, which it was thought would be given when the jury reconvened on the following Monday.

But the jury was not to hear Frank until the following Monday and another event took place which was thought to be of little consequence at the time, but which later assumed a vital bearing on the case.

R. P. Holloway, day watchman at the factory, walking through the building early Thursday afternoon, came upon the negro sweeper, Jim Conley. Conley was washing a shirt and appeared strangely embarrassed when caught in the act by Holloway.

He explained that he was washing the shirt in preparation for the inquest to which he had been summoned.

Visit to the factory. He recalled giving her the pay envelope. He said that she left his office and that he heard her talking with another girl, who thought, and then heard their footsteps dying away.

He denied that he sent her to the rear of the factory to see if an expected shipment of metal had come.

Every person in the crowded and stuffy little room hung on to each word of his testimony as it came, clearly from his lips; but if anyone was expecting an incriminating admission he was disappointed, for it did not come.

Instead, the witness-defendant told a most remarkable and impressive story of his actions on the day of the crime, a story which since has been most strongly corroborated by the testimony of other persons.

Starting incident followed in close succession until the next inquest hearing on Thursday of the following week.

Paul P. Bowen, a former Atlanta, Tex., on the suspicion of having led there after the crime, and a day later the Pinkertons were trailing a Greek from Atlanta to Anneton, Ala., where he was supposed to have taken refuge after killing the girl.

Bowen was arrested on the strength of a story that a woman had heard him muttering wildly in his room in a Houston hotel.

"Why did I do it? Why did I do it?" he declared she heard him cry. Clipping telling of the murder were found in his trunk, but it was found that he had not been in Atlanta for a year.

The city in Anneton was discovered to be as worthless and the Pinkertons abandoned their theory that a Greek had anything to do with the crime.

the narrow lane out into the sun of humanity that filled the station house corridors did he display the slightest trace of reluctance. Looking straight ahead in an evident endeavor to avoid the sinister glances of the crowd, he hurried into the "communications" room with Chief Langford's hand on his arm.

Once inside the room, his face assumed an expression of relief and he walked to the stand with an air of confidence. He answered the questions about it without hesitation.

He was nervous and apparently fearful when it came time for a young victim. The mother's power was a stern, imperative invitation to the father in the coroner's jury as well as a fervent plea to his own.

Thursday unless he was notified to the contrary. Minor heard nothing from Judge Hoan and carried the jury box to Judge Pennington to have the twelve panels drawn. He notified the attorneys for the State and the prosecution in ample time for them to be at the court. Solicitor Hugh B. Dorsey and his assistant, the only attorneys to put in an appearance.

It developed Thursday morning that there was no rather-ruffled chief at the police department the previous afternoon when Jim Conley was snatched from his cell in the station over to the Tower without their permission and without their knowledge.

Chief Lanford said: "This will never happen again." He went to Chief Beavers' office to see if permission had been given for Conley's removal. Beavers said he did not know Conley was gone. Supt. Sergeant Holcomb was appointed. He said he had not been notified that the prisoner was to be taken away. "Turkey Bayne, the lawyer, was asked to explain the mysterious disappearance of Conley. He informed Chief Beavers that Detective Starnes and Campbell had taken him about a half hour before.

Chief Lanford said that Conley was still in custody, made a personal visit to the jail. When Starnes and Campbell later were in conference with the chief they told him that they had taken nothing about their intention because neither Chief Beavers nor Chief Lanford was in the station at the time.

Barrow Advocates Lose in Upper House After Long and Strucuous Fight.

The bill creating Barrow County, with Winder as the county seat, was defeated in the Senate Thursday afternoon after a long and strenuous fight.

A large number of people were down from Winder to witness the action of the Senate. The House had already acted favorably on the bill. Senator Duffner, of the thirtieth district, led the fight for the new county.

While this bill passed the House with the endorsement of three of the six Representatives from the district affected, it is known that only one of the Senators from the three from the counties concerned to-day will vote for the bill.

Either the defeat or the passage of the Barrow bill, will mean an end of the consideration of new counties by the next Legislature.

CHAPTER IN PHAGAN MYSTERY

TWO EARLY FIGURES IN PHAGAN MYSTERY

CHAPTER III.

Everything that occurred, trivial or important during those first few days after the body of little Mary Phagan was discovered in the pencil factory basement took on a dramatic aspect. The people were keyed to as high a pitch by the revolting crime that for a time it seemed to require only a spark to fire them to violent deeds.

Let a strange person, so much as appear at the police station to confer with Chief of Detectives Lanford and wild rumors spread about the whole city like magic. Let one of the detectives drop a careless remark and in a flash a nervous, mysterious understanding that a complete confession had been made to the police by the murderer.

It was a sinister reception that the first catch in the detective's net received from the group of angry men when he was hurried by night to headquarters Sunday night of the day after the murder had been slain.

All through the day crowds had hung about the police station, some of them merely morbidly curious, others having the mistaken impression that they were going to get the author of the crime. Since Sunday night Leo Frank had been taken into custody in the morning, there had been no arrest, but now with the end of the day came the intelligence that the murderer of Mary Phagan had been captured and was being brought to a cell at the police station.

ARTHUR MULLINAX.

Smiles Defiant at Crowd.

Early the crowd availed to learn the man's identity. On each side of the doors they lined themselves as he was walked, defiantly, toward them between two detectives. A smile curled his lips when he heard their sullen mutterings.

"I know that guy," it's Art Mullinax, comes a hoarse whisper from a roughly dressed youth.

The group of the detectives and their captive, but officers barred their entrance in the police station. To Chief Lanford, Mullinax repeated his denial of the crime which he had made previously to the detectives when they forced him under arrest.

"It's a horrible mistake," he cried, dropping the bravado he had displayed before the crowd. "I don't even know Mary Phagan, and I don't remember the only time I can remember of seeing her was at a party at the home of a friend."

His protestations of innocence, in fact, were placed in solitary confinement and he was allowed to see him or her only through the bars of his cell.

Mullinax, however, had a different opinion. He declared that he had known Mary Phagan for some time. He had met her frequently at the car pool where she worked. He had seen her at one time. He was certain he could not be mistaken. If it was not Mullinax, he was even more certain in his own mind that it was not Mullinax, and he had replied, calling him by name, and that he had seen her frequently at the car pool where she worked. He had seen her at one time. He was certain he could not be mistaken. If it was not Mullinax, he was even more certain in his own mind that it was not Mullinax, and he had replied, calling him by name, and that he had seen her frequently at the car pool where she worked.

o'clock and destined to enter the factory.

Atlanta News Unusual.

He called Next Lee in the evening, something he never had done before as an answer when Leo called his house early Sunday morning after finding the body and calling the police.

There was no answer when Call Officer Anderson attempted to get him on the telephone when the four policemen were in the factory early that morning.

He acted in a highly suspicious manner when the officers came to his house Sunday morning to take him to the police station for questioning. All the time that the storm of accusation and bitterness was rising against the young factory superintendent, his attorney, Luther Z. Roser, kept a sharp carver for fear that Frank in the end would be found guilty innocent. Convinced of his client's innocence, Roser worked quietly and faithfully in his behalf. Only once in the early days of the tragedy was he provoked to a show of his building fighting qualities. This was when he reached the police station after Frank's arrest and was refused the privilege of seeing Frank.

"Will you see whether they can stop me from conferring with my own client," he shouted, "for five minutes."

From Frank's arrest until the next day, when the inquest was to begin, a dozen detectives were searching the factory right from top to bottom for evidence. Practically every employee of the plant was questioned and detectives were sent about the city running down fresh leads that came in to the postmaster of the department.

On the eve of the inquest came the tragic funeral services of the found into the grave and saw the body disappeared from sight. The arrest of the mother was unusual. The whole gruesome story of the finding of the body was repeated at the inquest, which began next day, but nothing was told which would throw any further light on the identity of the guilty person. Next Lee told in his ignorant fashion of every move he had made during the fatal day and of his movements in the factory that night.

His story had every appearance of truthfulness. Coroner Donohoe was not able to trip him or catch him in any misstatements. He declared that he had no knowledge that the body was in the building until he went into the dark basement shortly before 9 o'clock that morning and saw the huddled form in the dim light of his flashlight.

The officers who visited the factory that morning told their stories. Several of them were of the opinion that Leo knew much more than he had told and their testimony reflected this opinion, but the investigation of the case failed to elicit any admissions.

Conley Enters the Case.

Interest was centered in the testimony of Frank, which, it was thought, would be given when the jury resumed its session Thursday. The inquest was continued until the following Monday, and another event took place which was thought to be of little consequence at the time, but which later assumed a vital bearing on the case.

It was on the early morning of the following day, when the inquest was about to begin, that the shift in preparation for the inquest to which he had been summoned. Holloway notified the detectives of the suspicious circumstance and Conley was placed under arrest. That night the first formal charge was laid against Frank and Leo. They were transferred from the police station to the "two" under commitments in which it was stated that they were accessories to the murder of Mary Phagan.

Apparently unprepared of the terrible charge that was made against him, Frank appeared at the resumption of the trial, looking as though he were the most unconcerned person in the room as he passed through visit to the factory. He recalled giving her the pay envelope. He said that she left his office and that he heard her talking with another girl, but he thought, and then heard their footsteps dying away. He denied that he went far to the rear of the factory to see if an expected shipment of metal had come.

No Incriminating Admission.

Every person in the crowded and stuffy little room hung on each word from his lips, but if anyone was expecting an incriminating admission he was disappointed, for it did not come. Instead, the witness-defendant told a most remarkable and impressive story of his actions on the day of the crime, a story which since has been most strongly corroborated by the testimony of other persons.

Starting incidents followed in close succession until the next inquest hearing on Thursday of the same week. Paul P. Bowen, a former Atlanta boy, was arrested in Houston, Tex., on the suspicion of having been in the building on Sunday night. The Pinkertons were trailing a Greek from Atlanta to Houston, Ala., where he was supposed to have taken refuge after killing other persons.

Bowen was arrested on the strength of a story that a woman had heard him muttering wildly in his room in a Houston hotel.

"Why did I do it? Why did I do it? I did it because she heard my cry. Clipping falling of the murder was found in his trunk, but it was found that he had not been in Atlanta for a year. The clue in Atlanta was discovered to be as worthless and the Pinkertons abandoned their theory that a Greek had anything to do with the crime."

to his cell in conversation with Frank.

From Frank's arrest until the next day, when the inquest was to begin, a dozen detectives were searching the factory right from top to bottom for evidence. Practically every employee of the plant was questioned and detectives were sent about the city running down fresh leads that came in to the postmaster of the department.

On the eve of the inquest came the tragic funeral services of the the narrow lane but into the jaws of danger. He studied the station house corridors did he display the slightest trace of nervousness. Looking straight ahead in an ostentatious endeavor to avoid the sinister glances of the crowd, he hurried into the Commissioner's room with Chief Lanford's hand on his arm.

There he saw the room, his face assumed an expression of relief and he walked to the door, unlocked it with a key, unlocked the door, unlocked the door, unlocked the door.

He unlocked the door, unlocked the door, unlocked the door, unlocked the door.

was not drawn this morning as Judge Scott stated it would be done. The State assembly will be ready Monday unless something entirely unforeseen happens, and will act on trial of this man at that time." Judge R. F. Pennington declined to draw a jury for the Frank trial Thursday morning until he heard definitely from Judge L. S. Ross whether the case could be opened next Monday. Judge Pennington announced he would hear definitely at 10 o'clock Thursday afternoon whether the case would be called Monday, and he would draw the jury that time if necessary.

A Deputy Sheriff Pinnas Miner had instructions from Judge Ross to have one of the other judges in the state on Thursday unless he was notified to the contrary. Miner heard nothing from Judge Ross and carried the jury box to Judge Pennington to have the twelve panels drawn. He notified the attorneys for the state and the prosecution to appear on time for them to be at the court. Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey said his assistant was the only attorney to put in an appearance.

It developed Thursday morning that there were two rather ruffled chiefs at the police department the previous afternoon when Jim Conley was searched from his cell in the station over to the tower without their permission and without their knowledge.

Chief Lanford said: "This will never happen again." Chief Lanford also said that the two detectives, Strains and Campbell, that if the search was taken from the police station again he (Lanford) would be in on it.

When Detectives Estlin, Strains and Campbell later were in conference with the chief they told him that they had had nothing about their intention because neither Chief Beavers nor Chief Lanford was in the station at the time.

DORSEY DEMANDS TRIAL IN CAMP LIFE AFFRAY STIRS HELLO GIRLS' ABILITY PEACHTREE STREET

CAMP LIFE INCREASES. HELLO GIRLS' ABILITY

Swimming, Rambles in Woods, Auto-Rides and Sleeping Outdoors Give New Lease on Life.

If you do not believe the simple life is conducive to better work, ask some of the heads of departments of the Bell Telephone Company. They'll tell you that since the establishment of Camp Wyanoke at Lakewood Heights, where the young women employees of the company spend their vacations and their week-ends, the work of the "hello girls," the stenographers and the other young women who work in the big building at Mitchell and Pryor streets, has greatly improved.

"The idea we had in mind when Camp Wyanoke was established," Miss Katherine Tatum, who is in charge of the camp, said, Thursday morning, "is working out splendidly. A few days on a week's stay at the camp, invigorated and almost with a new lease on life. They have breathed pure, fresh air; they have worked about the camp and they return to their work with a vim and a determination that is usually lacking during the hot summer months."

"Simple life is lived in all its phases at Camp Wyanoke. With the exception of the harder and unimpaired work of cooking all the work is done by the girls. They wash dishes, wash their own clothing—or most of it—keep house, sew and do a hundred and one other jobs.

"When work is done they go swimming and wading, or take long rides in the automobiles the company sends out to them several times a week.

"Every Wednesday and Saturday nights there are dances and games of various kinds."

"The practice of sleeping in the open air is considered by Miss Tatum one of the best features of the camp. It gives many girls who heretofore have been cooped up in tiny city rooms a chance to recuperate.

"Sunday School in Camp Wyanoke is given a chance to taste the joys of camp life. Those who had taken their vacations before the camp was installed have been given a leave of absence of three or four days; they might visit the camp.

"There are always about twenty girls at the camp, and on Saturday and Sunday this number is sometimes swelled to a hundred, by the girls who come out to spend Sunday. Sunday school is held in the open air under the trees, and is usually attended by about a hundred young women.

Factory Supplants Farm as Exporter

WASHINGTON, July 24.—How the United States is changing from a great exporter in commodities to a manufacturer is shown in every report issued nowadays by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

PRESIDENT'S OPPOSED AS DICTATOR SALSMAN STABBED

Works Charges Executive With Usurping Legislative Power. Scores Tariff Influence.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—On the floor of the Senate today Senator Wood of California, denounced President Wilson for usurping legislative power in the tariff bill pending before the Senate.

"The tendency of latter-day politics is to exalt the executive at the expense of the legislative and judicial power of the Government, and make the President the master and ruler of them all, and the master and not the servant of the whole people," said the Senator.

"It is an unwarranted and dangerous tendency. Every public official, however exalted, should be confined to the limits of his powers as fixed by the Constitution."

He charged Tariff Corollary.

"If this bill is passed, it will be the result, in part, of outside influence that should never enter into the deliberations or acts of Congress. The Constitution provides:

"The executive power herein granted shall be vested in a President of the United States of America, and he shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

"The President is also made Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy. That instrument further provides that the executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States of America. It is further provided that he shall have the right to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and to recommend to them such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

"No warrant for influence. This is the only power vested in the President in respect of the making of laws. It is not within his power to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and to recommend to them such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

"Here the Senator said that his views coincided with those injected into the Democratic platform of 1912 and he quoted from the declaration of principles drawn by the Democratic party at that time.

In concluding his speech, Senator Wood said:

"I have approached this subject with reluctance and purely from a sense of duty. I expressed similar views during the administration of I have the greatest respect and esteem for the incumbent of the great office of President of the United States, as I had also for his predecessor."

"I believe in the integrity and sincerity of his purpose to serve the people and the country to the very best of his ability, but I do not feel that I can express my views on a question so serious and far-reaching in its consequences."

"It makes me situation only the more believing that one of such high ideals and patriotic purposes should do anything that can reasonably be construed to be a usurpation of power or an infringement of the constitution in any way. Some time ago I was present at a presidential election convention and sat in the front row of the audience."
